“ I spent most summers with Harmony, and Harvest, when they lived in Pine Grove. Once harmony and I baked a cake. This is one of those memories where the details blend together in such a way that you can't remember who did what. Upon the cake's completion, one of us was dancing in celebration with the cake balanced on one hand. Just as the other said to "be careful or you'll drop the cake," it landed frosted side down on the floor. There were tears and consoling, but we did not eat cake that day.

This is just the first memory that came to me as I sat to write about Harmony. There were far more memorable stories, like that time Harmony found herself waist deep in a rushing creek and Harvest and I saved her, along with the old neighbor guy who heard our calls for help.

Harmony will live forever in my heart as a sweet girl, not without sass and gumption.
